In the last few years there is a growing demand for different web applications. As the demand for applications increase, research is now focused on many directions, to leverage new architectures, improve scalability, developing new frameworks, introducing new development platforms, building multi-tier applications, enhance scripting languages, improving filters, introducing security platforms and so on.

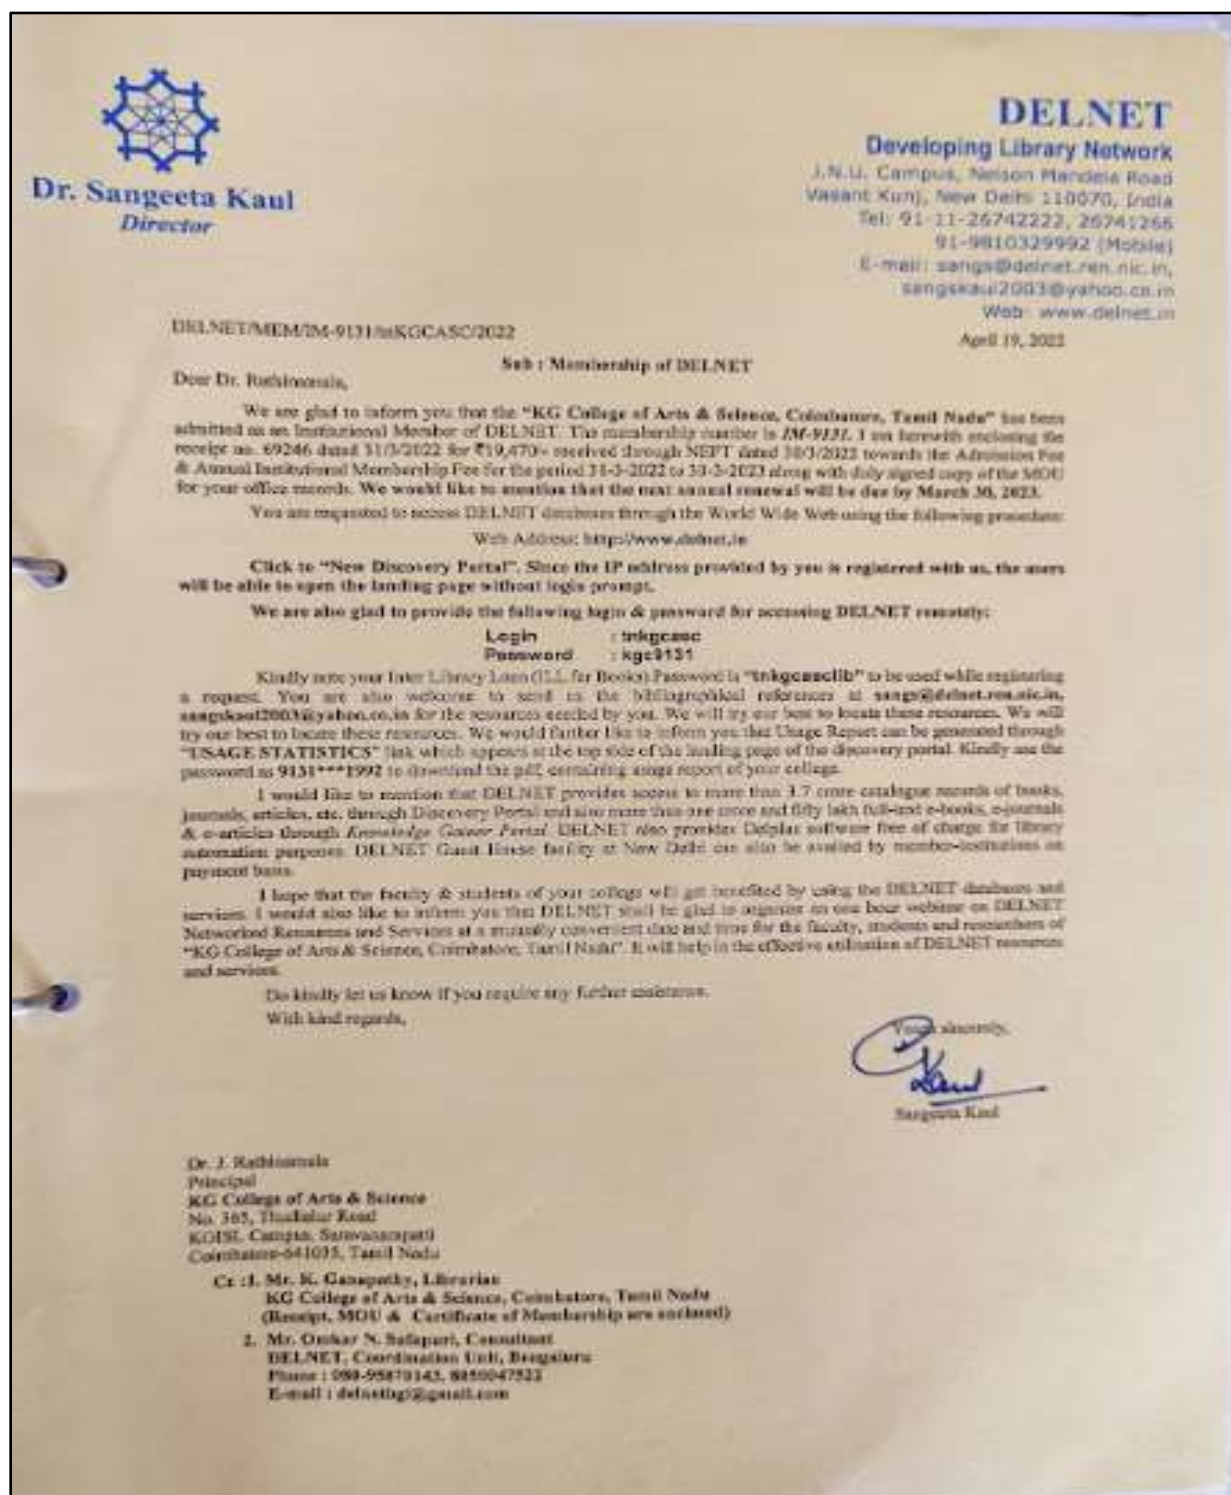

In the web applications we experience many generations. While the first level generation was primitive with little scope and features, the subsequent generations look at improving technology, functions and features in the web world.

Realizing the need to document the current research in the Web applications, this international journal has been initiated. The "International Journal of Web Applications" (IJWA) intends to be a high quality referred journal. The IJWA invites original contributions in the areas listed below. The IJWA publishes research papers, technical reports, book reviews and notifications. Each submission undergoes extensive review.
